

Engraved map with contemporary full-wash colour.

THE GREATEST BRITISH SUCCESS IN THE WAR OF JENKIN'S EAR

This Plan of the Harbour, Town and Forts of Porto Bello...

Author

DURELL, Philip

Publication date

1740

Publisher

S. Harding,

Publication place

London,

Physical description

Engraved map with contemporary full-wash colour.

Dimensions

420 by 585mm. (16.5 by 23 inches).

Notes

Philip Durrell (1707-1766) was a British naval officer. He rose to the rank of Vice Admiral over a stellar career, participating in important naval victories including the Siege of Louisbourg in 1745, when a British fleet captured the city in the War of the Austrian Succession. This map was drawn when he was still a Lieutenant, serving under Admiral Vernon during his command of Jamaica during the War.

The capture of Porto Bello occurred in the early stages of the War of Jenkin's Ear, which turned into the War of the Austrian Succession. The War of Jenkin's Ear began as the British fought the Spanish for the right to continue with slave contracts in Spanish America, developing into the War of the Austrian Succession as European powers ostensibly challenged Maria Theresa's claim to the Hapsburg throne, but in reality attempted to subsume Austrian possessions in Europe.

Porto Bello was an important stronghold in the Caribbean, and a point of departure for Spanish bullion ships. Admiral Vernon took part in a failed attempt to stop a Spanish treasure fleet sailing from Porto Bello in 1727, and subsequently claimed that he could take the port with just six vessels. He was given the Jamaica command, and launched an expedition to Porto Bello in 1739, occupying the town for three weeks and rendering the key buildings unusable, destroying it as a viable port for Spanish ships. The British accomplished the occupation with only three lives lost. The resounding success of Porto Bello was welcomed throughout Britain and British America. The Portobello districts in London, Edinburgh and New York are named after the victory; Mount Vernon, the home of George Washington, was named after Vernon. Durrell's map provides an eyewitness account of this famous victory.

The map is a clear and detailed portrayal of the entrance to the port. Because of the wind, Vernon was forced to focus the attack on the harbour fort, labelled here as the Iron Castle. It is shown in flames with the British warships firing on it, as is the Castle de Gloria on the other side of the bay. Durrell's carefully numbered key shows the position of the British and Spanish, and the ships which were taken or destroyed.

Dedicated to Sir Charles Wager, First Lord of the Admiralty from 1733 to 42, who was partially responsible for appointing Vernon to his command.

Bibliography

Provenance

Price: £3500

Inventory reference: 10876